

Greg Zoeller is the former Attorney General of Indiana (2009-2017) and previously served as the chief deputy attorney general (2001-2009). During his years in office he served with Governor Mitch Daniels (currently President of Purdue University) and Governor (former Vice President) Mike Pence and was named the “Attorney General of the Year” in 2015

<https://www.theindianalawyer.com/articles/37515-zoeller-named-attorney-general-of-the-year>.

Since leaving government Greg has served as a consultant for consumer-facing companies and as a settlement counsel resolving government litigation. Much of his work involves developing compliance programs in industries regulated by state attorneys general, the CFPB, FTA and other state and federal agencies.

Mr. Zoeller currently serves in many areas within the Attorney General community including:

- As a contracted advisor to the National Association of Attorneys General. National Association of Attorneys General \(naag.org\)
- On the advisory counsel of the Attorney General Alliance. G.-Zoeller-Bio\_English.pdf \(cwagweb.org\)
- Board of Advisors to the Attorney General Education Program at George Mason University Law and Economics Center. Attorneys General Advisory Board – Law & Economics Center \(masonlec.org\)
- Board of Directors of The Center for State Enforcement of Antitrust and Consumer Protection Laws. The State Center

Prior to his years in the Office of the Attorney General, Mr. Zoeller served on the senior staff of Dan Quayle when he was U.S. Senator for Indiana and then in the White House when he was Vice President and also at the U.S. Department of Justice. His undergraduate study was at both Purdue University and Indiana University where he also graduated law school. Greg and his wife and family live in Indianapolis.